Webinar: "Internationalisation and metropolitan spaces"

22 Jul. 2020
22 Jul. 2020

Introduction

Currently, local policy management and the exercise of the corresponding powers by local government entails the need to build connections with international stakeholders and to incorporate them in this field. In addition, International Agendas are settings for decision-making in which representation, visibility and influence must be put into practice, considering the repercussions and challenges that result from decisions taken in the local sphere.

Nevertheless, in a context with scarce resources and pressing social and economic challenges, external actions cannot be considered a “luxury good” by local government, which, instead, must see this as a robust and effective mechanism to provide citizens with better living conditions. In a dynamic in which large cities and metropolitan areas stand to gain from their participation in the international arena, what can these cities and areas provide global citizenship in return?

The recent changes to the international action taken by local governments envisage simultaneous phenomena, such as the exponential growth regarding their international activism, a change in focus on how local governments relate to the rest of the world—no longer only as cooperating actors (donors or beneficiaries), but as stakeholders involved in the global agenda in every sense—and an evolution on how they relate to the outside world, which is increasingly professional in nature. Internationalization has gradually gained cross-cutting space within the institutional, political and territorial objectives of local administrations, moving towards becoming a strategic action and, eventually, public policy.

Metropolis and “Proyecto AL-LAs” are offering a webinar based on the Metropolis Observatory’s Issue Paper 9 “The Internationalization of Metropolitan Spaces”, to provide local governments with tools on how to build strategic public policy on international action in a metropolitan context.
