Metropolis webinar "Why should we combat inequalities"

This will be the second in a series of three webinars dedicated to the issues of inequality, organized in collaboration with the Catalonia-Europe Foundation. From political philosophy and democratic values emerge with force the main arguments that justify and drive the struggle to build an equitable society, which at the same time is confronted with the story of hegemonic thought that leads us to the dystopia of a world fractured by imbalance of inequalities. The fight against inequalities has economic and social implications, but it also has to do with the principles of a democratic society and the power relations that articulate the dynamics of a society. ●

(tbc) Online

Metropolis webinar: Proposals to address inequalities

This will be the last in a series of three webinars dedicated to the issues of inequality, organized in collaboration with the Catalonia-Europe Foundation. Public policies, as an essential response of the democratic system, must reconnect with citizen-based demands to address growing inequalities. Democratic politics has to govern the main vectors that move the economy, orienting them to the common good and the general interest. To make this possible, the policies to be followed must be a transforming power to change social and economic dynamics, reforming institutions and current trends. If there are no forceful answers to the systemic crises we face and we are unable to reverse the current situation, we are heading for economic, social and environmental collapse. ●
