Secretariat General

NOTE FROM THE SECRETARY GENERAL

These past three months have seen the organisation make significant progress, especially in terms of our relationship with the United Nations. Moreover, during this period we have launched three new initiatives, which are providing us with better practical knowledge on metropolitan governance through the lens of innovation, urbanism and gender.

On the one hand, last September we signed a new Memorandum of Understanding with UN-Habitat, which provides a framework of cooperation between Metropolis and the UN.

On the other hand, as a result of our organisation's continuous hard work, two new pilot projects were launched for the first time: "Tactical urbanism", about making small-scale, low-cost and temporary interventions while fostering active citizen participation; and "Public innovation labs", about innovative solutions to create public value. Both projects encompass a range of issues related to improving metropolises, through an approach involving discussion, dialogue and an exchange of ideas, while helping us address some of our goals in terms of strengthening urban capacities, as specified in our Action Plan.

In addition, in September, the first issue of Gender Keys was published. With a short format that is quick to read, the publication promotes the incorporation of gender perspectives as we build and develop our metropolises.

We have not yet reached the summit of all our goals, but we are working non-stop to transform our metropolises into a better place to live. Every Metropolis member is an essential piece of the puzzle. I hope this progress report will show how dedicated, committed and conscientious the Metropolis membership has been in working to achieve our goals over the past three months.

High Level Political Forum on Sustainable Development

New York, 15-17 July

The United Nations (UN) convened the seventh edition of the High-Level Political Forum on Sustainable Development (HLPF) in July, to review progress towards the accomplishment of the 2030 Agenda for Sustainable Development. For the delegation of the Global Taskforce of Local and Regional Governments that attended conferences, this HLPF was the occasion to reaffirm that local governance and territorial cohesion must be embraced to leave no one and no place behind.

Release of the first issue of Gender Keys

Online, 4 September

Gender Keys is a series of short publications that promotes the incorporation of the gender perspective in metropolitan planning, and gives continuity to the implementation of our gender mainstreaming strategy. The first publication, titled "Do metropolises have a gender?", introduces the gender urban planning applied to a metropolitan scale. The upcoming editions, expected to be released bimonthly, will take the concepts introduced in this first issue to the metropolitan grounds, bringing examples from our members which are, in different parts of the world, using gender approaches to deliver better public policies and services.

First Forum of Asian Pacific Metropolises

Makati, 5-6 September

The First Forum of Asian Pacific metropolises was co-organized by Metropolis and UCLG ASPAC within the framework of its Council and the new cooperation MoU signed between Metropolis and UCLG ASPAC last April in Montevideo. It brought into limelight some of the three challenges of large metropolitan spaces in Asia Pacific region whether on mobility, housing, social services or climate change.

The debate was moderated by the Secretaries General of Metropolis and UCLG ASPAC and addressed the main priorities foreseen: to materialize the agreement we have signed with UCLG ASPAC through some content oriented debates, to gather the political decision-makers of cities across the ASPAC region, and to enrich the debates on the role of Asian Pacific metropolises cities in the world organizations.

Seminar on International Strategies in Metropolitan Areas

Barcelona, 4-5 July

A seminar was organised by the Metropolitan Area of Barcelona and CIDOB to present and discuss on the main findings of the study “The International Action of Metropolises”, which analysed four Metropolis members and Vienna. Said event was attended by representatives of a variety of institutions, including five of our members. The study concludes that institutional fragmentation slows down the construction of international strategies on a metropolitan scale. Without the appropriate governance tools, it is difficult if not impossible to properly measure and compare international public policy.

Charter on ecological and sustainable urbanism

Barcelona, 13 September

The teams of the Metropolis Secretariat General and the UCLG World Secretariat learned about the charter on ecological and sustainable urbanism. This charter, created by Salvador Rueda, is born to tackle the challenges that urban agglomerations pose at present, such as exponential demographic growth, migration towards urban areas and segregation, and inequalities brought by the rapid expansion of cities. All of them come up in a context of climate emergency that obliges us to reconsider our use of resources and the implement sustainable dynamics. Four major points were discussed: the uncertainties the future holds and cities as solution bearers, ways to face these challenges, the changing paradigm from an industrial society to an information-based one, and finally, how to plan and evaluate our cities using ecological guidelines. In essence, the charter, which contains 44 evaluation indicators, is an open guide for the design of new urban developments and the regeneration of existing ones to achieve a sustainable ecosystem.
